THE

HISTORY

OF

FRANCE,

UNDER THE KINGS OF

THE RACE OF VALOIS,

FROM

THE ACCESSION OF CHARLES THE FIFTH,
IN 1364,
TO THE DEATH OF CHARLES THE NINTH,
IN 1574.

THE SECOND EDITION,
WITH VERY CONSIDERABLE AUGMENTATIONS.

BY

NATH^L WILLIAM WRAXALL, Esq.

IN TWO VOLUMES.

VOL. I.

LONDON:
PRINTED FOR C. DILLY, IN THE POULTRY.
M.DCC.LXXXV.

CONTENTS

OF THE

FIRST VOLUME.

CHAPTER THE FIRST.

Introduction on the different genius of Engliſh and French hiſtory.—Situation of France at the death of John, and the acceſſion of Charles the fifth.—Character of Charles the Bad, king of Navarre.—Declenſion of the Engliſh affairs.—Death of Charles the fifth.—His character.—Acceſſion of Charles the ſixth.—Diſorders under the regency of the duke of Anjou.—The king attains to his majority.—Appearance of the ſpectre in the wood of Mans.—Inſanity of Charles.—Character of the queen Iſabella, and of the duke of Orleans.—The king's relapſe at a maſquerade.

masquerade.—Confusion in the State.—Assassination of the duke of Orleans.—Long anarchy which succeeds.—Claims of Henry the fifth, king of England to the crown of France.—Death of Louis, the first Dauphin.—Death of John, the second Dauphin.—Intrigues of the queen with John duke of Burgundy.—His assassination.—Philip "the Good" succeeds.—Rapid successes of Henry the fifth.—His Marriage with Catherine of France.—Death of Henry, and of Charles the sixth.—Reflections. Page 1

CHAPTER THE SECOND.

Political condition of France.—Character of John duke of Bedford.—Accession and distresses of Charles the seventh.—Appearance of the maid of Orleans.—Character of Agnes Soreille.—Death of the queen dowager Isabella, and of the duke of Bedford.—Treasonable conduct and flight of Louis the Dauphin.—Death of Agnes Soreille.—Circumstances of it.—The English ultimately driven out of France.—The Dauphin's disobedience, oppressions, and retreat into Burgundy.—Charles's fruitless attempts to gain possession of his person.—The king's illness.—Death.—Character. 44

CHAPTER THE THIRD.

Character of Louis the eleventh, and commencement of his reign.—Interview with Henry the fourth, king of Castile.—Louis's violence and oppressions.—League of "the public good."—Accession and character character of Charles, last duke of Burgundy.—Interview of Peronne.—The king's imprisonment, and terrors.—Death of Charles duke of Berri.—Interview of Louis and Edward the fourth, king of England, at Pecquigni.—Louis's insidious policy.—The duke of Burgundy's invasion of Switzerland, battle of Nancy, and death.—Reunion of Burgundy to France.—Conclusion of Louis's reign.—His cruelties.—His pilgrimage.—His encreasing severity.—Minute circumstances of his illness.—Death.—Character.—Mistresses. 66

CHAPTER THE FOURTH.

Accession of Charles the eighth.—Character of the regent, Anne, lady of Beaujeu.—Her administration.—Her efforts to seize on the duchy of Bretagne.—The duke of Orleans's intrigues and flight.—Battle of St. Aubin du Cormier.—Imprisonment of Louis, duke of Orleans.—Marriage of Anne of Bretagne to the king.—Union of the duchy of Bretagne to the crown.—Termination of the regency.—Charles's character, and schemes of conquest.—Invasion of the kingdom of Naples.—Romantic expedition.—His march.—Uninterrupted train of victory.—Coronation.—Return.—Battle of Fornoua.—Charles abandons himself to pleasures.—Loss of Naples.—New plans of invasion.—The king's change of conduct, and death.—Circumstances of it.—His character. 110

CHAPTER THE FIFTH.

Acceſſion and character of Louis the twelfth.—His divorce, and marriage with Anne of Bretagne.—Conqueſt of Milan, and impriſonment of Ludovico Sforza.—Second conqueſt of Naples, and diviſion of that kingdom with Ferdinand of Arragon.—Perfidy of that prince.—Gonſalvo de Cordova drives out the French.—Magnanimity of Louis.—His dangerous illneſs.—Death of Iſabella of Caſtile.—Acceſſion of Julius the ſecond to the papacy.—His Character.—League of Cambray.—Death of the Cardinal of Amboiſe.—Ambition and ſucceſs of Julius the ſecond.—Gaſton de Foix.—His victories.—Battle of Ravenna.—Death of Gaſton.—Circumſtances of it.—French driven out of Italy.—Death of Julius the ſecond.—Acceſſion of Leo the tenth to the pontificate.—Illneſs and death of Anne of Bretagne.—Her character.—The king's grief.—Marriage of Francis Count d'Angouleſme to the princeſs Claude.—State of the court.—Louis's third marriage with Mary princeſs of England.—His illneſs.—Death.—Character. 145

CHAPTER THE SIXTH.

Acceſſion and character of Francis the firſt.—Character of Louiſa of Savoy, Counteſs d'Angouleſme.—Battle of Marignano.—Death of Ferdinand king of Arragon, and of the Emperor Maximilian.—Interview of Francis and Henry the eighth.—Commencement of of the wars between Francis and the Emperor Charles the fifth.—Character of Charles Conſtable of Bourbon, and of the admiral Bonnivet.—Death of Leo the tenth.—Loſs of Milan.—Execution of Semblençai.—Conſpiracy of the Conſtable of Bourbon.—Circumſtances of his treaſon and flight.—Death of the Queen.—Entry of the admiral Bonnivet into Italy.—Siege of Marſeilles by Bourbon.—Francis purſues him over the Alps.—Battle of Pavia.—Death of Bonnivet.—Enumeration of the circumſtances attending the king's capture and impriſonment.—Francis's confinement, and removal to Madrid.—Meaſures of the regent, Louiſa of Savoy.—The king's rigorous captivity.—His illneſs.—Viſit of the ducheſs of Alençon, his ſiſter.—His releaſe, and return into his dominions.—Commencement of the favour of the ducheſs d'Eſtampes. 189

CHAPTER THE SEVENTH.

Violation of the Treaty of Madrid.—Renewal of the war between Francis and the Emperor.—Sack of Rome.—Death of Charles of Bourbon.—Unſucceſsful expedition againſt Naples.—Death of Lautrec.—Peace of Cambray.—Releaſe of the Dauphin and Duke of Orleans.—Magnificence of the King.—Death of his mother, Louiſa of Savoy.—Interview of Marſeilles.—Marriage of Henry duke of Orleans to Catherine of Medecis.—Renewal of the war.—Invaſion of Provence by the Emperor.—Death of Francis the Dauphin.—Circumſtances cumſtances of it.—His Character.—Reflections.—Retreat of the Emperor into Italy.—Marriage of James the fifth, King of Scotland to the princeſs Magdalen.—Character of the Conſtable de Montmorenci.—Interviews of Nice, and of Aigues-Mortes.—Francis's amours, illneſs, and conſequent change of character.—Paſſage of the Emperor through France.—Alteration in the miniſtry.—Third war between Charles and Francis.—Deſcription of the Court of Francis.—Battle of Cerizoles.—Invaſion of Picardy by the Emperor.—Intrigues of the ducheſs d'Eſtampes.—Concluſion of Peace.—Death of Charles, Duke of Orleans.—Circumſtances attending it.—His character.—Death of the Count d'Enguien.—State of Parties in the court.—Illneſs of Francis.—Circumſtances of it.—His laſt admonitions to the Dauphin Henry.—His death.—Character. 252

CONTENTS

OF THE

SECOND VOLUME.

CHAPTER THE EIGHTH.

Character of Henry the ſecond.—Changes in the ſtate.—Diana de Poitiers—her character.—Romantic attachment of the king to her.—Diſgrace of the ducheſs d'Eſtampes.—Duel of Jarnac and la Chataigneraie.—Inſurrections in Guyenne.—Perſecution of the Proteſtants.—Death of Margaret of Valois, queen of Navarre—her character.—Renewal of war between Henry and the Emperor.—Catherine of Medecis left regent.—Siege of Metz.—Continuation of the war.—Abdication of the Emperor.—Power of Diana de Poitiers, ducheſs of Valentinois.—Expedition under the duke of Guiſe againſt Naples.—Battle of St. Quentin —Capture of Calais.—Marriage of Francis the Dauphin to Mary queen of Scotland.—Concluſion of the peace of Cateau-en-Cambreſis.—Carouſals of the court.—The king's death.—Enumeration of the circumſtances which attended it.—Character of Henry the ſecond.—His Miſtreſſes.—Reflections. Page 1

CHAPTER THE NINTH.

State of the kingdom at the death of Henry the ſecond.—Character of the duke of Guiſe—of the cardinal of Lorrain—of the king of Navarre.—of the prince of Condé.—Catherine of Medecis.—Her character, perſon, and political conduct.—Diſgrace of the ducheſs of Valentinois.—Acceſſion of Francis the ſecond.—Power of the Guiſes.—The king's weak ſtate of health.—Aſſaſſination of Minard.—Conſpiracy of Amboiſe, and its defeat.—Executions.—Suſpicions againſt the prince of Condé.—Convocation of Fontainbleau.—Arrival of the king of Navarre and the prince of Condé at court.—They are arreſted.—Trial of the latter prince.—Francis's illneſs.—Condemnation of the prince of Condé.—Intrigues and cabals of Catherine of Medecis.—Death of Francis the ſecond.—Circumſtances of it.—His Character.—Funeral.—Arrival of Montmorenci.—Releaſe of Condé. 54

CHAPTER THE TENTH.

Reflections on the ſituation of affairs at the acceſſion of Charles the ninth.—Catherine of Medecis ſecures to herſelf the regency.—Formation of the "triumvirate."—Pernicious policy of the regent.—Aſſembly of the ſtates.—Maſſacre of Vaſſy.—Duplicity of Catherine.—The young king carried to Paris by Anthony king of Navarre.—Commencement of the civil wars.—Prince of Condé is declared chief of the Hugonots.—Unſucceſsful attempts to effect an accommodation.—Siege of Rouen.—Death of the king of Navarre.—Battle of Dreux.—Conſequences of that action.—Siege of Orleans.—Aſſaſſination of the duke of Guiſe.—Account of the circumſtances attending it.—His funeral, and character.—Concluſion of Peace.—Death of La Cipierre.—Character of the Marechal de Retz.—The prince of Conde's amours, and ſecond marriage.—Charles the ninth attains to majority.—Adminiſtration of Catherine.—Interview of Bayonne.—Commencement of the ſecond civil war.—Ineffectual enterprize of Meaux.—Battle of St. Denis.—Death of the Conſtable de Montmorenci.—Circumſtances of that event.—Character of the young king.—Second pacification. 105

CHAPTER THE ELEVENTH.

Attempt to seize on the prince of Condé.—Third civil war.—Battle of Jarnac.—Death of Condé.—Character of the admiral Coligni, and of Jane, queen of Navarre.—Siege of Poitiers.—Battle of Moncontour.—Arrival of the king in the camp before St. John d'Angeli.—March of Coligni.—Concluſion of peace.—Duplicity of the court.—Marriage of the king to the archduchess Elizabeth.—Her character.—Feſtivities at court.—Policy of Catherine of Medecis.—Reflections.—Diſſimulation of Charles and of the queen-mother.—Arrival of Coligni at court.—Commencement of diſunion between the king and Henry duke of Anjou.—Contraſt of their characters.—Betrothal of Henry, prince of Navarre to Margaret of Valois.—Death of Jane, queen of Navarre.—Circumſtances attending it.—Determination of Coligni to remain at Paris.—Margaret of Valois.—Her nuptials, and character.—Attempt to aſſaſſinate Coligni.—Treachery of Charles.—Reſolution taken to exterminate the Hugonots.—Terrors and irreſolution of the king previous to the maſſacre.—Death of Coligni.—Deaths of the Hugonot chiefs.—Detail of the principal circumſtances attending the maſſacre of Paris.—Conduct of Charles, conſequent to that event.—Fourth civil war.—Siege of Rochelle.—Character of Francis duke of Alençon.

Alençon.—Remorſe of the king.—Election of the duke of Anjou to the crown of Poland.—Carouſals at court.—Charles's impatience for his brother's departure.—Mary of Cleves.—Her character and amour with the duke of Anjou.—Quarrels between the king and his mother.—Henry duke of Anjou begins his journey.—Illneſs of Charles.—Suſpicions on that event.—Arrival of the king of Poland at Cracow.—His ſubſequent conduct.—New commotions in France.—Change in the king.—Conſpiracy of the duke of Alençon, diſcovered.—Progreſs of Charles's indiſpoſition.—Intrigues of the queen-mother to ſecure the regency.—Execution of La Mole and of Coconas.—Circumſtances of the king's laſt illneſs.—Death of Charles the ninth.—Enquiry into the cauſes of it.—His character, iſſue, and funeral.—Concluſion. 173