Verdict for the plaintiffs.

The exact relationship of Isolda to one of the Richards in the pedigree has been given on the record and afterwards expunged, but judging by chronology, it was probably as shewn by the dotted line. The fact of three Richards succeeding one another evidently made this part of the pedigree obscure, and the plaintiffs were not quite certain of it themselves.

By another writ on m. 420, the same plaintiffs recovered from the same defendants, and on the same plea, two messuages, fourteen tofts, a mill and twenty-four virgates of land in Humberstone and Thurmaston, co. Leicester.

"As for your behaviour in your business, be industrious, careful, honest, just, wronging no man, but quicksighted and sharp to discover the frauds and cheats of others, call no man knave but deal with all, as such, to your own security. Backbite no man nor speak ill of any man, but speak well and do all the good you can to all men, but especially to those of the household of faith. Be kind, affable, curteous and obliging to all and give honour to whom honour is due and obey the magistrate, for their power is of the Lord. If you deserve God's blessing, you can't fayle of it and then though absent, you will be the joy of the hearts of your parents who give you their blessing and dayly pray for your preservation.
