The Seal in red wax ¾ inc. in diameter, is suspended by a parchment label. Arms, on a shield, in the centre, an eagle displayed, debruised by a fesse. Legend, "* s'. GILBERTI TVRBERVILE."

It may be curious to note, that all the authorities combine in giving the arms of Turberville, Chequy or and gules, a fesse ermine; crest, an eagle displayed or. The seal to this charter would seem to have arms and crest combined in the coat armour; for in the Encaustic Tiles given in my "Neath and its abbey," the arms are simply chequy with the fesse,

NOTES TO THE PRECEDING PEDIGREE.

The existence, and consequently the marriage of Elizabeth, daughter of Thomas Beauchamp Earl of Warwick, has been overlooked by genealogists. Dugdale, in his History of Warwickshire, has described, with the aid of an engraving, the several windows on the south side of the quire of the collegiate church of Warwick, in which are represented the figures of this Earl's ten daughters, each of the married bearing on her outer mantle the arms of her husband. Of these ladies two, Isabella and Elizabeth, thus bore the arms of Ufford; and this circumstance, joined to the fact that the names of Isabella and Elizabeth have been sometimes considered synonymous, induced Dugdale to conjecture, unfortunately enough, that Isabella and Elizabeth were one, and that the repetition of the figure denoted only the first marriage of the former with John Lord Strange of Blackmere.

Mr. Beltz, in his Memorials of the Order of the Garter, is wholly silent with regard to the marriage of Sir Thomas Ufford, whom he, however, was the first to identify as the brother of William Earl of Suffolk. As he was buried at the Greyfriars, Ipswich, we may believe that he did not fall, as Mr. Beltz supposes, in the fight in the neighbourhood of Navarete in 1369.

The father of Sir James de Audley was summoned to Parliament as Hugh de Audley senior, 15 May 1321, according to Sir N. H. Nicolas (Synopsis of the Peerage), who incorrectly makes his second son, Hugh de Audley junior, his son and heir. (See Beltz' Memorials of the Order of the Garter, p. 82, 83.) Sir James de Audley, his eldest son and heir, was never summoned to Parliament. His eldest son was the celebrated Sir James de Audley, K.G. whom Mr. Stapleton has confounded with his father in Archæol. xxvi. f. 345.

Godwin, Catalogue of Bishops, p. 111, says that John de Ufford, appointed Lord Chancellor in 1346, and Archbishop of Canterbury 24 Apr. 1348, and who died 7 June 1349, was son of the Earl of Suffolk. If of the family, he may have been brother of the first Earl. Andrew de Ufford, brother of the Archbishop, appointed Archdeacon of Middlesex in 1347, Joint Keeper of the Great Seal in 1353, and confirmed, according to Godwin, Bishop of St. David's, 6 Feb. 1349, died in 1358. For particulars of him, see Newcourt, vol. i. p. 79.

The MS. Harl. 1393, f. 15, states that Cecilia de Ufford married also Sir William Blount.

Beltz, Memorials of the Order of the Garter, p. 101, incorrectly says that Maud de Ufford was abbess of Barking, confounding her with her kinswoman Maud de Montacute. He also as incorrectly says (p. 212,) that Isabell de Beauchamp married secondly John Lord Strange, and that Sir Ralph de Ufford was elder brother of Robert first Earl of Suffolk. (f. 249.)

So says the Esc. 14 Hen. IV. m. 17; but there can be no doubt that the jury found the heirship incorrectly. The finding should have been that Robert Lord Willoughby was cousin and heir of Maud Countess of Oxford through Cecilia his great-grandmother, eldest sister and coheir of William Earl of Suffolk, eldest son of Robert Earl of Suffolk, brother of Sir Ralph de Ufford father of the said Maud.

A Sir Robert de Ufford was buried at the Austin Friars, Norwich. (Weever's Fun. Mon. p. 720.)

Walter de Offord held lands, jointly with Geoffrey de Suthorp, in Northamptonshire, in 1300, (Esc. 29 Edw. I. n. 110,) among which were tenements in the parish of Offord, held by wardship of Rockingham Castle.

John de Ufford held lands in Wedon Pinkeney, Northamptonshire, in 1301, (Esc. 30 Edw. I. n. 110,) and also as John de Dufford, in 1303, with Cecilia his wife. (Esc. 32 Edw. I. n. 90.) In 11 Edw. II. (1317) his name occurs as Sir John de Dufford, Knight, with Cecilia his wife in a charter respecting the manor of Bradecote . . . (orig. charters Brit. Mus. V. 5; and a seal lately found near Wallingford, Berkshire, having upon it the arms of Ufford charged in canton with a star of six points, and the legend S' JOH'IS DE DVFFORDE, may, with some degree of confidence, be assigned to him.[a] (Engraved in the Archæological Journal, iii. 75.)

In the Collectanea Topographica et Genealogica, vol. V. pp. 154, 155, and VIII. 179, 180, are articles on the Ufford pedigree, of which that now compiled is a correction.

Apuldrefield,
11th February 1847. G. S. S.

[a] In the Archæological Journal (ubi supra) this seal is ascribed to John Lord Ufford, summoned to Parliament in 1360, mentioned in p. 274, but who is there described as the son and heir of Ralph de Ufford, brother of Robert first Earl of Suffolk. The following remarks on the arms it exhibits are then added: "Mr. Davy, of Ufford, who has obligingly supplied several instances of the name having been written 'de Dufford,' selected from the Leiger Book of Blythburgh Priory, observes that the Uffords derived their arms, Sable, a cross engrailed or, in the first quarter a mullet argent, from the family of Peyton, settled at Ufford; Glover, in his Ordinary, assigning this coat to Peyton. On the other hand, in Bloomfield's History of Norfolk, it is stated that the Uffords bore this device by permission of the family of Hovel."—EDIT.
